Tent Chart

BACKPACKER
THE OUTDOORS AT YOUR DOORSTEP

WE'VE LISTED MANUFACTURERS ALPHABETICALLY, WITH TENT MODELS SORTED BY USAGE, THEN BY CAPACITY, THEN BY PRICE.

Listed products

These charts include 2013 models appropriate to BACKPACKER readers. You can find complete, searchable listings for the entire lines of all manufacturers in this issue at backpacker.com/gearfinder.

Usage

Summer/screen (SU) Designed for maximum ventilation, these shelters withstand moderate rain and are best when you're more concerned about bugs than bad weather.

Three-season (3S) These tents are your best choice for most conditions, spring through fall. They have enough interior space for waiting out storms, plus the ventilation you need to stay cool on summer nights. Most can handle strong wind and rain, but not heavy snow loads.

Convertible (CV) This is a hybrid design that comes with pole, window, vestibule, and/or rainfly options so that you can strip the shelter down for summer trips, or strengthen it for stormy adventures.

Mountaineering (MT) With tough fabrics, sturdier pole structures, and external guypoints, these tents are built for winter's strong wind and snow loads. Most have large vestibules to store cold-weather gear and allow for hunkered-down cooking.

Tarp (TA) This is exactly what it sounds like: waterproof fabric that you rig with cord, using trees or trekking poles for support. Shelter doesn't get any lighter, but a tarp's not much of a buffer against bugs.

Hammock (HA) A hammock specifically designed for backpacking.

Type

A-frame (AF) Simple, light, and often inexpensive, A-frame designs usually require staking. Headroom and elbowroom are limited because of sloping walls, and stability in strong winds can be shaky.

Modified A-frame (MAF) This type uses a center hoop pole, a ridgeline pole, or curved sidewalls to create more interior space and structural stability than the standard A-frame.

Dome (DO) Domes come in many shapes, sizes, and pole configurations. Expect arched ceilings and a freestanding setup.

Hoop/tunnel (HT) Hoop, tunnel, or “tube” tents offer a good combination of weight and weather resistance, but need to be adequately staked out.

Pyramid/tepee (PY) This shelter design consists of a rainfly (with or without a canopy) supported by a center pole and staked out to create a tepee. Space-to-weight ratio is excellent, but it’s prone to condensation.

Double-wall (DW) A traditional double-wall tent uses an inner canopy (to sleep in) and a rainfly (to keep water out).

Single-wall (SW) A single-wall shelter uses just one layer for both functions, which makes it extremely light for the space. Often, vents (or a hybrid design that uses a partial fly) help reduce condensation.

Wedge (WD) Higher at the head and lower at the foot, wedge tents are aerodynamic (pitched low end into the wind) and lightweight. They give up some headroom.

Dimensions

The height cited is the maximum interior ceiling height, in inches. Tarps that can be pitched high or low have no height listed; pyramid-style tarps list maximum height. Floor length and width are also maximums.

Vestibule

This is your mudroom. If a tent has one, it is standard (S) or optional (O), or else there is none (N). The number is the size of the vestibule’s footprint. Two numbers mean two vestibules.

Weight

This number (supplied by the manufacturer, like the other specs) is the minimum weight. It includes rainfly, tent body, and poles (but not stuffsack or stakes).
